In the summer of 2015, Patti Jean, a 55-year-old woman from Washington state, went for a hike in the remote Olympic Mountains. She had hiked the trail many times before, but this time she got lost. She wandered around for days, trying to find her way back to the trailhead, but she only got more and more lost.

As the days turned into weeks, Patti Jean began to despair. She was hungry, thirsty, and exhausted. She had lost all hope of being found alive.

But then, one day, Patti Jean saw something that gave her hope. She saw a figure in the distance, a figure that looked like an angel. The figure came closer and closer, and Patti Jean could see that it was a real human being.

The figure was a young woman named Sarah, who was also hiking in the mountains. Sarah had gotten lost as well, but she had managed to find her way back to the trailhead. When she saw Patti Jean, she knew that she had to help her.

Sarah helped Patti Jean back to the trailhead, and she stayed with her until she was safe and sound. Patti Jean was so grateful to Sarah for saving her life. She knew that she would not have made it out of the wilderness without her help.

Patti Jean's story is a story of hope and survival. It is a story about the power of the human spirit. It is a story about the importance of never giving up, even when the odds are stacked against you.

Patti Jean's story is also a story about angels. She believes that the figure she saw in the distance was an angel who was sent to guide her home.

She is grateful to the angel for saving her life, and she knows that she will never forget what happened to her.
