Excerpt from the Book

"I remember the first time I realized I was different. I was five years old and playing in the park with my friends. We were all running around, laughing and having fun, when one of the boys stopped and stared at me.

"What's wrong with your skin?" he asked.

I looked down at my skin and saw that it was a different color than his. I didn't know what to say, so I just shrugged and kept playing.

But that moment stayed with me. It was the first time I realized that I was different from the other kids. And it wouldn't be the last."
