The Lady Vols' success was due to a number of factors, including the team's talent, chemistry, and coaching. The team was led by All-Americans Chamique Holdsclaw and Tamika Catchings. Holdsclaw was the national player of the year, and Catchings was the SEC player of the year. The team also had a strong supporting cast, including Nicole Powell, Semeka Randall, and Tonya Edwards.

The Lady Vols were also coached by the legendary Pat Summitt. Summitt was one of the most successful coaches in the history of college basketball, and she was known for her tough and demanding style. Summitt pushed her players to be their best, and she was always there for them when they needed her.

The Lady Vols' historic 1997-1998 season is a story of triumph and inspiration. The team's success was a testament to the hard work and dedication of the players, coaches, and staff. The Lady Vols' story is one that will inspire readers for years to come.
