This song is played with a capo on the second fret I believe, although it is by no means a must. Play it in whatever key you like. However, the chords below are more shapes if you put a capo on. What I have below is for without a capo. I play it with the capo on the second fret, but I still play a G shape, or a D shape, you get it.

Also, the G and Em I have in mind here are not standard G and Em, although you can use those if you want. I use these:

EADGBE
G xx5433 (this is from open, whether it be headstock or capo)
Em xx2000 (same as above)

I do use the standard G if I am going to go to the chorus directly after, so I can walk up to the C, but most other places I do not. You can do whatever you want.

[Verse 1]

G D Em Em
Way up north, where the snow flies
C D G D
And the sun don't hardly shine
G B Em Em
If it weren't for, my true love
C G D
I'd have long ago lost my mind
G
I'd have long ago lost my mind

[Verse 2]

There's good folks here and good folks there
most everywhere I go
But the land of my heart is down
where the snow white cotton grows
where the snow white cotton grows

[chorus]

C Em Am G
When the river runs over from the melting snow
C D G
we will take to the higher ground
d Em Am G
when the water goes down again, we'll saddle our old paint
C D G
we'll be homeward bound
C Em D G
me and my love will be homeward bound

[solo] play verse

[verse 3]

Heartstrings hold tighter than the roots of a live oak tree holding through tornado wind tougher than timber, stronger than steel they'll guide me back southward again
they'll guide me back southward again

[repeat chorus]
