The Catawba grape, a native of the Appalachian Mountains, was once the most widely planted grape in the United States. It was known for its hardiness, its ability to withstand pests and diseases, and its unique, fruity flavor. Catawba wines were popular in the 19th century, but the grape's popularity declined in the early 20th century with the of European grape varieties.

Today, the Catawba grape is making a comeback. Winemakers across the country are rediscovering the grape's unique qualities and are producing award-winning wines. In 2017, a Catawba wine won the prestigious Governor's Cup at the Ohio Wine Competition. This recognition is a testament to the grape's potential and the growing interest in American wine history.

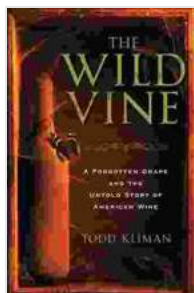

The forgotten grape is more than just a wine. It is a symbol of American heritage and resilience. It is a reminder that even in the face of adversity, there is always hope for renewal.
